Asian Citrus Psyllid – Interior Quarantine

Diaphorina citri
(REVISED)

DIVISION/PROGRAM: PSD

DAO 09-06

EFFECTIVE DATE

1. PURPOSE

This Order is issued to mitigate an immediate risk of further infestation of Asian Citrus Psyllid in Arizona by increasing protection against the spread of the pest on articles and commodities leaving the area under quarantine.

The Asian Citrus Psyllid is an effective vector of Huanglongbing or citrus greening, Liberibacter asiaticus, a bacterial pathogen that is devastating to citrus.

In addition, a number of other plant species are hosts for Diaphorina citri and Liberibacter asiaticus but may not show signs of infection. The disease, Huanglongbing, and its vector, the Asian Citrus Psyllid, are a threat to the Arizona citrus industry of $37.2 million in value and residential landscape citrus. Once a plant is infected with the disease it may take several years for symptoms to appear and the plant will decline soon after. Although the disease is not known to occur in Arizona there is no known cure for the disease and the vector is highly mobile.

The Order becomes effective when signed by the Director and will remain in effect until completion of the rulemaking process or until revoked.
